

Scenarios:

Scenario 1

Bill is a college sophomore and is considered a full time student at his university. Bill decides that he wants to be more involved in trying to find a future career for himself. Although this is a goal he wants to accomplish, it seems to be a bit intimidating since he doesn't quite know what he needs in order to prepare for such a goal to work towards.

Bill talks to his college advisor about how to create a path for him to follow to reach his goal of getting a job once he graduates college. His advisor recommends him a website to go to called PathFinder.com. Bill takes this recommendation and uses it later in his free time to see what it is about. Bill uses PathFinder.com to find what he needs to accomplish in order to get a job after he graduates. Bill learns how to improve his resume and find internships to establish network connections in order to become more successful in the work world.

Scenario 2

Jared is a college senior ready to graduate from university and is ready to find a job once he does graduate. Jared has experience with internships and has had a lot of experience with practicing interviews and prepping for them. Although Jared has a lot of experience, he would like to find more information about specifically what jobs he can get with the amount of experience he has and what courses he has taken in the past.

Jared hears about PathFinder.com through an advertisement and decides to check it out himself. Jared visits PathFinder.com and inputs his prior experience to find jobs around his area that would be best suited for him. Jared successfully finds some jobs that he shows interest in and can schedule interviews for.

User Stories:

As a student, I would like to see future job opportunities based on my skill set.

As a student, I would like to see path options to achieve my goal to get a job.

As an employer, I would like to give recommendations for what future employees need to be successful.

As anyone, I would like the website to be user-friendly and easy to navigate.

Feature List:

- A survey in the introduction of the website to take to best fit the user in a path to find options for what job they want.
- An option for employers to put requirements on what future employees need to do in order to be eligible for that job.
- Website will have categories and will be organized in order for it to be user-friendly as possible (not over complicating things).
